

Trinidad Head Inaugural Marathon

Sun., Nov. 5, 2017

It was still raining at 7:30 AM with a forecast of a 90% chance of rain until 1 PM. So I wondered if anyone would show up (including myself)! Surprisingly ten of us showed up. Conditions ended up being much better than predicted and we only had a light rain for about an hour out of the 5+ hours I was there. There was heavy cloud cover or rain so there were a lot of GPS dropouts and mileage may appear shorter than actual. I am waiting for emails from the rest of the runners with their times and number of loops run.

Tom & I are tied for 1st place and course record. I think Tom could have easily surged ahead but he held back to stay with me. Shown below is what I have so far.

I ran a few laps with an altimeter watch and found the elevation gain looks more like 270'. So 5,670' for the full marathon. -- Mike Wood <mikewoodbooks@gmail.com>
